President Dedicates New CIA

President Eisenhower laid the cornerstone for the Central Intelligence Agency's new quarters today and said no task could be more important than its job of gathering information to help the United States preserve peace.

In a brief dedication speech, he said the hush-hush agency's reputation "for quality and excellence" is a proud one.

The President drove to Langley from the White House for the ceremony, after which he was flying to Gettysburg to vote in the Pennsylvania state election.
